M. DCCCXXIX.

London Merchants Triumphant :

O R

Sturdy Beggars are Brave Fellows.

To the Tune of the Jovial Beggars.

I.

A M a sturdy Beggar,
And in that Title glory,
Nor can the World a Title boast
That's more renowned in * Story ;
And a-begging we will go, &c.

II.

The Prince of sturdy Beggars
Immortal † Nassau shone,
To save his People's Rights and Lives
He freely gave his Own.
He a-begging too did go, &c.

* In the Year 1566. when. Margaret Dutches of Parma, was Governess of the Low-Countries, Lewis Count of Nassau, at the Head of four hundred Gentlemen, presented a Petition to her against the Inquisition, and other Invasions of their Rights and Liberties. When she seemed under some Concern, to see such a considerable Body of Persons of Distinction oppose the State Projects, Cardinal Grandville, her First Minister, called them, in Derision, a Pack of Gueux, that is Beggars, or rather Sturdy Beggars. Whereupon the chief Men of the Netherlands formed a Confederacy under the Title of the Gueux, or sturdy Beggars; which Name they gloried in, and bore till they had thrown off the Spanish Yoke, and freed their Country.

† William, Prince of Orange, Ancestor of our late glorious King William, was Chief of the Confederacy of the Gueux, or Beggars, and lost his Life in their Cause, being assassinated at Delft by one Balthazar Gerard, a Burgundian, hired (as was thought) by Philip King of Spain, to commit that execrable Murder.

Court

III.

Court Titles he despised,
 On OURS he built his Fame ;
 Then how can e'er our Title die,
 But with great NASSAU'S Name?
Who a-begging too did go, &c.

IV.

Firm to our Name and Cause
 Brave * Horn and Egmont stood ;
 Who thought their Country's Freedom cheap,
 Tho' purchas'd with their Blood.
They a-begging too did go, &c.

V.

With Holland's Sturdy Beggars
 We too will share the Prize ;
 They pulled the Inquisition down,
 We overturn'd EXCISE!
And a-begging we will go, &c.

VI.

Industrious as the Bee,
 Around the World we roam ;
 The Courtiers are the Drones that suck
 The Honey we bring Home,
When a-begging we do go, &c.

* Count Horn and Count Egmont, two of the Confederate Gueux, or Sturdy Beggars, beheaded at Brussels by Duke d'Alva, for opposing the Inquisition, and other Impositions that struck at the very Root of the Liberty and Property of the Netherlanders.

VII.

The Wealth of both the Indies,
We through our Country spread ;
Nay, Vermin that abuse us most,
Are by our Labour fed.

When a-begging we do go, &c.

VIII.

We scorn for Place or Pension,
Our Consciences to barter,
Or Britain's Liberty betray,
For Golden Bribe or Garter.

And a-begging we will go, &c.

IX.

Pray what are all the Courtiers,
How much so e're they swagger,
What other Name do they deserve,
But that of Pilf'ring Beggar?

When a-begging they do go, &c.

X.

The Courtiers beg a Pension,
And we the Courtiers dun ;
They meanly beg the Nation's Wealth,
We boldly ask our own.

When a-dunning we do go, &c.

XI.

By Begging and fine Promises,
To trust 'em oft we're drawn ;
Will these then Britain's Honour guard,
Who leave their own in Pawn?

When a-ticking they do go, &c.

B

To

XII.

To call Excise a Publick Good,
Their Hirelings find Pretences,
And, modest Creatures ! only beg,
We'd but give up our Senses.

Thus a-begging they too go, &c.

XIII.

'Twill make you all as rich as Jews,
Hear Old Dame * Osborn cry,
Ope' but your Fist, and shut you Eyes,
You'll see't as plain as I.

Thus a-begging she does go, &c.

XIV.

" I'd prove it plain, says † Walsingham,
" But I've no Time to lose ;
" My Master's been thro' dirty Work,
" And I must clean his Shoes."

Then a-begging he does go, &c.

XV.

Fog's Sneers, and Caleb's Arguments,
 Hyp-Doctor makes a Jest on,
And will confute 'em both with Ease,
If he can beg the Question.

Thus a-begging he does go, &c.

* The Writer of the London Journal.

† The Writer of the Free-Briton.

 Orator H—ly.

XVI.

"Your Sins deserve Excise," he roars,
Then what must be his Due,
Who cheats the Gulls, his Auditors,
Of Time and Money too?

When to hear him they do go, &c.

XVII.

But should the Sins of all Mankind,
Be ever fairly parted,
Nine Parts would fall to Priests like him,
and Tythes would be inverted.

So a-begging he may go, &c.

XVIII.

Against the Sturdy Beggars,
The grand Projector raves,
For had not they opposed his Scheme,
You'd all been Jneaking Slaves.

And a-begging you might go, &c.

XIX.

"'Tis Wine, he cries, that makes 'em prate,
" Excise just suits my Wish;
" If Water I can make them drink,"
" They'd be as mute as Fish.

And a-begging they may go, &c.

XX.

"If they will have Mundungus,
" I'll give them thinner Fare;
" And since they are so fond of Smoke,
" I'll make 'em live on Air.

When a-begging they do go, &c.

" You

XXI.

" You grow too fat, dear Countrymen,
" And I must drench your Purfes;
" Excise shall be your Physick,
" Dragoons shall be your Nurses.
And a-begging you may go, &c.

XXII.

" You must be foundly fleec'd and whip'd,
" You Beggars are too Rich:"
But should he try, I doubt, he'll make
A Rod for his own Br—ch.
And to T—n he would go, &c.

XXIII.

Would all like Sturdy Beggars stand,
Nor basely sell their Vote;
We soon should take him down a Peg,
And make him change his Note.
When to T—n he does go, &c.

XXIV.

Should all his Crew their Merits share,
The Scene would strangely alter,
And many a titled R--g--e would change
A Ribon for a Halter.
And to T—n he would go, &c.
